Proposal: HIST 131 (World History) should be approved for the Social Sciences menu.

1. Disciplines: HIST 131 is a history survey course that is also a degree requirement for the International Studies major; it thus brings together two of the disciplines from the list of those that qualify for the Social Science menu.
2. Definition of Social Science courses: HIST 131 explores human behaviors and interactions in global history from c. 1450 to the present. Course content includes discussion of the relationships between humans and their physical environment (e.g., the ecological and epidemiological impacts of the Columbian exchange in both Old and New Worlds, or the international attention in recent decades to the new environmental threats of nuclear power, global warming, habitat degradation, etc.); the creation and interaction with institutions of power and governance (e.g., the emergence of absolutist and constitutional monarchies, republics, democracies, and more recently, the emergence of international bodies and NGOs); the study of how people produce, distribute and consume goods and services (with particular attention to the convergence of modern industrialization with the rise of worldwide empires). In these ways, the course is highly focused on "higher levels of [social] aggregation." And as a History course, HIST 131 privileges "the history of human functioning over time."
3. Course Content: HIST 131 introduces students to a particular period of history (c. 1450-present), "with an emphasis on event timelines, historical biographies, and the critical debates associated with their interpretation."

Please see course description, purpose, and learning outcomes/competencies below.

Course Description: Survey of the economic, political, and cultural interactions between major world regions and civilizations from the fifteenth century to the present, with attention to major global processes and movements. The course explores major themes such as the creation of the early modern and modern state, exploration and colonization, slavery and the Atlantic economy, comparative social and political revolution, and the global impact of the World Wars, Cold War, and post-CW period of globalization.

Purpose of this course: To cultivate the student's ability to think critically, consider information in context, and write about historical themes in a clear, analytical fashion. The course also seeks to promote global citizenship, historical curiosity and cultural sensitivity. By examining the historical processes that shaped societies and states across the world, this course should foster empathy and a sense of shared humanity.

Student Outcomes and Competencies: This course seeks not only to communicate facts, but also to cultivate knowledge of chronology, trends, themes, and connections that will help students build a holistic understanding of Global History. Upon completion of the course, successful students will be able to describe the trajectory of World History from 1400 to the present, analyze and evaluate primary source material related to course themes, and compare and contrast a variety of worldviews. Students will also be able to relate historical worldviews to their own understandings of the world and their place in it.
