Course Number: FAMO 453

or Degree Plan(s):

The home program from the Abilene campus recently updated the course description and title of this course.

New Course Name: Family Stress and Resilience

New Course Description: A study of the functioning and resilience of diverse families in the presence of stress. Students will apply theory and current research to the exploration of risk factors that influence the presence and effects of stress on families, protective factors that contribute to family resilience, and interventions that help families thrive in stressful contexts.

Previous course name: Family Crises and Resilience

Previous course description: Consideration of social institutions and resources in the community as they affect the well-being of children and families. Attention is given to: (1) families experiencing stress and crises; (2) working with nontraditional family structures (e.g., single parent and stepfamilies) (3) community resources for meeting family needs; and (4) providing students with practical experiences and information needed to work effectively with community groups.
